Dear Sir

Yoko Ono

We refer to our letter and your email of 8 June.

By refusing to remove the original story from your website you are continuing to defame our client. Your correction is completely inadequate and fails to follow the wording provided. Indeed, you have failed even to change the title of the article, which still reads "Yoko Ono Dines on Corgi", despite knowing that this is completely untrue and highly defamatory of our client. You have also failed to apologise for the offence and distress caused to our client.

Unless you comply with the reasonable requests made in our previous letter, our client will be forced to consider whether more serious steps must be taken against you.

Yours faithfully

Eversheds LLP
